is must returning towards a normal ac-divity, yet there is still some misgiving as to what a revival of activity in all our vast productive resources and in all our vast productive resources and in all our manufacturing plant may mean. The question remains to be settled by experience-whether we can fully de-pend upon finding a market or markets equal to bur productive capacity; and, if not, what is to be the effect upon commercial values. The fact that tha undombted commercial revival has not yet been attended with the rise in prices usual under such chreumstances natur-ally gives point to this question. (i) The pecent unfavorable crop weather has suggested the possibility of some draw-back upon the grand harvest prospects that have so excited the national ex-pectations, which causes some pessimis-it people to discount the promised farming prosperity and the inevitable increase in the business of the rali-roads. (b) Because, though there is nothing in our foreign relations to sug-gest impending danger, yet the annex-ution of Hawaii, the reopening of the scaling question, the deleate possibili-ties connected with the Klondyke gold excitement, and the stage of exhaustion and depression which due Cuban situa-tion is assuming in Madrid are all new elements that are needful to a sustained and continuously rising maiket. After such a long depression, the mercantile and professional classes have no uc cumulated profits to employ in specula-tion, much less to use in bona fide in-vostments. tion to the hand of gold continued with but little abatement for three years, but the excitement fell off in a marked de-gree in 1854. California discoveries had given rise to a general search for precious deposits in the Atlantic states, and this had been followed by wild speculations. A great deal of money had heen sunk in opening new mines and in attempting to develop old ones which had never yielded anything of value. Firty thou-sand men were engaged in mining for gold in this country at the close of 1850, and during 1852 and 1853 fully 100,000 were at work. At this time the Cali-fornia gold washings reached about $55,000,000 in value a year. At this period the diggings for gold were chiefly ulong aong the rivers. These were "flumed"--that is, the water was di-verted from its natural channel by imeans of woolen flues-and the accu-mulation of sand and gravel in the for-mer beds was washed. The first and richest "placers," such es the bars on the American, Yuba, Beatner, Stanfishus and other smaller streams in the heart of the gold region, yielded each miner as much as $1,000 to $5,000 a duy. The miners were ex-citable and frequently left valuable lo-calitios in search of something better. Occasionally a kind of fromy would sease and survation, the rest return-ing in poverty and rags. The Kern river faver raged through then periah from the strength of newspaper and other ring of the gold deposits were all ready worked out. The Fraser river rush occurred in 1853 and caused more suffering to the men of California then a pestilence might have done. Twenty thousand persons left the states for that remote region, where all suffered great privations. Many died and the survivors went back in a state of desti-tion. About the same time that the gold faver was at its height on the western Miss Bessie Nevins was visiting relatives and friends at Cortland last week. J. N. Pitiman has rented rooms of C. M.
