My dearest Sweetheart -

Believe this is the first letter I have written you since we were married. I don't know it is because there has been no need of writing before. Have just finished supper, the oven is Andy's for a change. Have an invitation to Fischer Linn & Co's office at 8:30. Tell Kate I will deliver her letter there. Saw Sam today and gave him Joe's note. Am afraid she is right in saying that Sam doesn't care for her like he did. I suggested that he write her and tell her just how he felt and he said he would today. However, don't say anything about it to Little Joe. Was in the shop today when Ethel was talking to Kate and heard her say for you to come home so she could go away, but I guess it is useless for me to say that you don't have to pay a damn bit of attention to what she says and you stay just as long as you want to. The enclosed clipping was in this evening's Deimitar. Suppose she is responsible for that too. Got my car out this morning and it looks fine. Just like new. It runs much better too. When our home and Frankie was very much surprised to learn that you were not with me. I told her I pushed you in the lake. Dog is OK. The grass in the back yard had grown so high you couldn't hardly get around. John was cutting it. I told him to work over your flower beds also. Everything at the office is fine. Dad invited me to stay over at his house while you were away, but I didn't accept. It is not home any more. Read your sweet little note when I went to bed last night and I was almost sorry that I insisted on your staying, but I know you will enjoy yourself. Miss you terribly & will miss you lots more when I go home but it won't be for long. Be careful & don't get hurt up there and don't get sick any more, and don't worry about me. Lots of love & millions of kisses.

Your Daddy.
